- (1) Willful defaulting of appearance or abandoning the case;
- (2) Willful omission of performing duties that should have been done in connection with the case of the client, or withholding any information that should have been disclosed to the client.

Clause 13

A lawyer shall not, upon having given advice to or becoming aware of any accounts of the case on the course of performing duties relating to one party, become a lawyer for or use the knowledge so obtained to assist the counter-party in the same case.

Clause 14

A lawyer shall not, upon having accepted to act as the lawyer for the case, use any trickery in any way without reasonable ground so as to obtain any benefit other than what has been agreed by the client to give.

Clause 15

A lawyer shall not do any act which constitutes a cheating, misappropriation or embezzlement, or take possession or detain money or property of the client acquired by him in the course of performing relevant duties for unreasonably long period without permission of the client, except where there are reasonable grounds.

Chapter 4

Conduct towards Lawyers, Suitors and Others

Clause 16

A lawyer shall not take away or do anything in a bidding manner with regard to a case for which another lawyer is representing, or accept or promise to represent a case while he knows that another lawyer is representing such case, except where:

- (1) A permission has been obtained from the lawyer representing the case;
- (2) There are reasonable grounds to believe that the client has revoked the retention of the previous lawyer from representing the case, or
- (3) The lawyer representing the case refuses, or expresses his unwillingness to continue representing the case.

Clause 17

A lawyer shall not advertise or allow other person to advertise any of the following:

- (1) Rates of service fees or a notification to the effect that service fees will not be charged, except where the advertisement is related to legal aid programs provided by the Lawyers Council, or by any relevant institutions, associations, organizations, or government agencies, or
- (2) Names, qualifications, positions, residence or office in a way indicating exaggeration or soliciting any suitor to come to the lawyer to represent his case, except for the display of the names, qualifications or such other things in reasonable and polite manner.

Clause 18

A lawyer shall not be engaged in any occupation, business, or behave in a way that violates good morals or impairs dignity and prestige of lawyers.

Clause 19

A lawyer shall not agree or promise to give any commission or compensation in any property or benefit to a person that finds or brings in the cases, or to have a person in the office who will find or bring in the cases for which the lawyer will give a discount to the service fees or to give salary or any amount of money or any property or benefits to the person who brings in the cases, even if such person is a clerk or a regular employee at the lawyer's office.

Chapter 5 Lawyer's Attire

Clause 20 During the time of conducting the case in court, the lawyer shall be attired neatly according to the following rules:

- (1) A male lawyer shall be attired in suit in white or other color that is not flashy, white shirt, black or other polite, non-flashy colored tie knotted in a sailor's way, or dress in Thai style with short-sleeved or long-sleeve shirt of polite color without decorative design in place of the suit, with white, brown or black dress shoes, socks with color similar to that of the shoes.
- (2) A female lawyer shall be attired in suit in skirt or blouse with polite and non-flashy color, and dress shoes.
- (3) A lawyer who may dress in official uniform may be attired in such uniform.
- (4) During the time of conducting the case in court, a lawyer entitled to dress in a barrister's gown must wear such gown also.
